Call for Applications: Co-Director for Early Career contributions

Public History Weekly. The Open Peer Review Journal is an open peer-reviewed academic journal on all aspects of public history. It opened a programme for scholars at the beginning of their careers in 2021. Authors are invited to publish with us before completing your doctoral thesis. In doing so, PHW aims to maintain its high-quality standards while neutralizing the usual academic hierarchy. As all directing teams, the Early Career venture consists of two co-directors who, in consensus, decide on topics, contents, authors, and calls, edit the submissions and send the finished articles to the PHW staff for publication.

We are looking for a co-director for the Early Career team and at the same time new member of the PHW Executive Board.

Applicants should be well versed in the field of Public History, hold at least a Master's degree in a related field and be currently employed in academia. The working language at PHW is English, but as an international publication by design, any further language is more than welcome. We seek gender equality in all aspects. As the current co-director is male, we especially welcome applications by non-male historians.

Public History Weekly offers the unique chance to work in a global team with renowned scholars of Public History, shape the future of one of the leading publications in the field, and work with a variety of young aspiring historians from all over the world.

If you are interested in becoming co-director, please send an e-mail with a short introduction of your academic background, fields of interest, and motivation to join the PHW team to [editorialboard \[at\] public-history-weekly \[dot\] org](mailto:editorialboard@public-history-weekly.org)
